One Cry

A National Call for Spiritual Awakening

A video opens with a Declaration of National Spiritual Emergency... A young adult draws a chalk circle around themselves as they describe this emergency and their declaration to:

- *TURN—in humble repentance from every sin God reveals to us
- *PRAY—with urgency for spiritual recovery and awakening
- *UNITE—with other believers in spreading the hope of a Christ centered revival

We, the Prayer Mobilization Team, invite you to watch the video and join the One Cry Movement, at www.ONECRY.com.

Pastors you may want to get the free resource pack. They also have a Facebook (FB) link that will give you daily nuggets and scriptures to guide your prayers... great for young people.

“Be Still” Journaling— A Different View

When my husband Mike’s first “Be Still” devotional book was hot off the press he asked me to start using it stating: “Given your busy schedule; if you can do this, anyone can!” Well, that would have worked if I was a person that could actually journal. I’ve always admired those that could sit still long enough, clear their minds without being [is that a cow over there] distracted and build their thoughts on paper. I write as I speak—in fragments—most often. Frustrated with my own disappointing reaction; I tried and tried again. Sometimes I would almost actually write down a sentence but it ended up to be yet another poor attempt at an actual continual thoughtful prose in response to the journal’s poignant questions.

Step back well over 40 years in time and a middle school girl who would write poems to express observations. [Cumulus clouds are puffy and bright and when they are out there is no rain in sight.] Now flash forward to a high school girl, who would write poems over love lost or high school days [1969 class poem]. In later years a poem would be written as an outlet for bereavement or in thoughts expressed for a new love, family, and inspiration.

And now to the present, and as a senior citizen [albeit still in denial], God is speaking loud and clear on this issue of journaling. Certainly your thoughts are written—not in journal prose but in verse. Then early one morning, during my “be still” moment, I wrote a poem to capture my “favorite verse” from the weekly reading. That began my first official “be still” poem expression and interpretation of journal entries to coincide with the weekly reading. Oh, not actually in the devotional book understand. I type them and file them on my laptop. And sometimes they are transferred from my iPhone notepad where I’ve jotted them during lunchtime or waiting for an appointment [but never while driving].

I’ve read that a poem is the use of words in their best order; while poetry is the use of the best words in their best order. This is why my thoughts are indeed poems and not poetry. They are inspired but never perfect to the poet laureate; not for show, but for the glory of God.

In recent weeks while sitting among the trees in the mountains of northern Pennsylvania, I took a picture of the tall strong, straight and noble trees. They clearly have withstood abuse from insects, birds, rain, windstorms, and even chainsaws. That particular morning as I read Hebrews 12, the words began a rhyme to the image of the trees in one particular verse. At the time I wasn’t thinking of the word “Revival” per se. not until a conversation where I was asked about an article on my poems and the theme “Revival” did it click. [Sometimes I am a little slow on that listening to God part.]

The following poem is shared with all who may find that place within; where their spirit can be revived again.

REVIVAL

(Hebrews 12:15b and John 4:1)

Are you the tree so tall and straight
With roots of bitterness and hate?
Poison thoughts and shameful ways;
Corrupting many in your ways?
With stagnant spirit, passion lost;
The need for a revival most.
Drink from the living water now;
Revive your soul and take the vow.
To live for Him and then they’ll see
The many who will see the tree.
Whose roots now deep and spirit filled;
On fertile ground by God’s love tilled.
With fruit abounding bright and clear
In love and care and void of fear.
To share the love of God’s great plan;
Spread the News throughout the land.
The loving roots and fruit you bear
Will pollinate, so others fair.
Then all who hear will follow Him
And sing the great revival hymn.
Grounded now, fed on His Word;
His love grows deep—a daily sword.
The Holy Spirit dwelling in
Each heart that cries to honor him.

“LIGHT THE FIRE AGAIN”

The E.C. National Prayer Summit
FOR SPIRITUAL RENEWAL AND AWAKENING

Imagine a room full of people, young and old, pastors, wives, lay leaders, on their knees seeking God for personal renewal and refreshing. What a difference that would make in our denomination, in our churches, in ourselves.

While the focus in 2012 will be increasingly on the presidential elections, we believe the true answers to our problems are not to be found in the White House but in the church house through a movement of spiritual awakening.

Will you join us this October 8, 9, 10 in Emmenton, PA at the Whitehall Camp and Conference Center for this Summit? Six meals and two night lodging for only $77/person in motel-like rooms or $61/person for a dormitory room. You can Google “Whitehall, Emmenton, PA” and see their brochure with pictures of the lodging and sylvan setting. It should be beautiful in October. We have also reserved the Missionary Cottage Auditorium for our meetings. Sign up today and think about who you would like to take along. Make your reservations with the E.C. Church Center and mark your check “E.C. Prayer Summit.”

We, the PMT, have been hearing the call, “Return to me and I will return to you,” says the Lord of Hosts,” Malachi 3:7. Perhaps you’ve been hearing it and feeling it too! If we are to be all that we can be in Christ Jesus, we need to come along side what He is
